Soi Chalermprakiat, Patong

We weren't going to include this one after they lost their prize cook. This was one of the big improvers over the past year with Orr's kitchen skills. We tried after she left and it had diminished somewhat. But with a new cook in place now it has come back a lot. You get a mug of tea or coffee and a decent sized fruit juice which really helps if you're feeling a bit dehydrated. Great value and very filling.
Price range - 100 to 150 baht.

Tavern On The Hill

21 Hasipee Rd, Patong

A little out of the way, but worth the trip. If you are into a quiet jungle setting while eating brekky this a great place to be. The view from the ground floor overlooking Patong is filtered by the restaurant across the road. David, the chef up there really knows his stuff and at 125 baht for what you receive it's a steal. The home-made potato pattie was done to perfection. You get a pot of brewed coffee too so you can have more than one cup.
Price range -- 125 baht

Palm Tree Restaurant

Off Nanai Road, Patong

This is another place that is hard to find, but once you do, you are rewarded with a comfortable and congenial setting sort of overlooking Patong. How they do a breakfast like this for only 100 baht is beyond me, and I really don't think it stay at that price for too long. The staff are super friendly and it makes the difference. It is attracting quite a following for its breakfast and for good reason. There are a lot of breakfasts around for this price but you get nowhere near near the amount nor quality as this one.
Price range - 100 baht.

Islander Bar

Soi Patong Resort, Patong

Quite a few to choose from here, so we went for the 175 baht special which suggested lashings of everything. The Cumberland sausage was delicious but didn't see where the rest of it lived up to the price. The bacon used is shortback and on the day we were there it came out a bit on the tough side. Having said that though, you do get a decent sized glass of juice, real toast and a mug of tea or coffee.
Price range -- 130 - 175 baht
