On the Grand Final day for AFL football a group were watching the game at Legends Bar in Patong. The bar gets quite a varied crew in there, many have no idea what AFL is or why someone would even play it. The uninitiated were asking about the rules or as they saw it, lack thereof. It really isn't an easy game to follow or even to try to explain the inconsistencies from one decision to the next. But the prize of the day goes to the gentleman who asked at the end of the first quarter of football, "So how many quarters do they have in this game?"

When it rains here, it really rains. Evidence of this was the deluge on Saturday 9th October, when several parts of the island were moved around to other places and some of the precarious construction was put to the test.
