

A local construction company was having difficulty keeping up with the frenetic building that shows no sign of abating here on Phuket, and decided to employ extra staff.

They put on a tiler and asked him to tile the bathroom of one of their project homes. Unknown to them at the time our man had a bit of a partiality to the green funny weed.

The project manager showed him the bathroom to be tiled and left him to do his job. The tiler thought this would be a good time to get into the right mood and did just that.

When the manager turned up back on site about two hours later he heard someone calling for help. Trying to figure out where the calls were coming from the manager eventually found his way to the bathroom where he had left the tiler. The only thing was there was now no way into the room.

The tiler had put himself into such a mood that he had tiled everything including himself into the room.

The door had to be broken down so as to get him out and give him his marching orders.
