

Continued from Page 14

bike had been parked in front of. He had been moving the bike from one side of the road to the other, in accordance with the odd day, even day parking requirements, for the past six months and had no idea who the bike belonged to and if they would ever turn up to collect it.

Our piece on dowrys in the last issue created quite a bit of feedback with emails both for and against the practice. And yes, everyone is different, and that is why there is a collective term for them. One writer took the trouble to send what turned out to be an eleven printed pages email outlining in detail why farang shouldn't have a bar of 'Sin Sof'. However, we won't go into that at the moment.

One thing that did come up though was what is the collective noun for the young ladies who frequent the bars.

The closest we could come to a collective noun was 'an abomination of'. This obviously goes back to 17th century England when they had a slightly different attitude to the ladies of the night. We feel it should be updated for the 21st century. So if you have any ideas for a collective noun for our young lasses drop us a line at info@andamanpost.com and let us know what you think.

To get you going we've asked a few people what they thought would be an appropriate term and came up with these few;

Collective name for Bargirls:

A vortex of... - because they suck everything in and nothing gets away;

A beaver of... - due to their housebuilding abilities;

A som tam of... - self explanatory we would

Terry (front right) decided to stop for an ale at Diver's (front left) one day recently only to find a bunch of friends on holiday from his hometown Esperance doing the same thing.

have thought;

A chatter of... - once again you figure it out;

A bankrupt of... - if you can't see the connection, you will soon.

A swamp of... - probably apply more to Pattaya than anywhere else.

Continued Page 17

Drift Beer Corner

PATONG BEACH

DRAGON CLUB

Coyote Dance
Laser Show
Sexy Show
Games
Pool Tables
Internet Cafe

Above Soi Easy
Bangla Road
Patong Beach
Phuket Thailand
Tel: 076 294 213

