He didn't stop running until he got to Beach Road.

The money was bunched up and he counted the hundreds, fifties and twenties under the street light. The total sum was six hundred and fifty baht. His head slumped and his heart sank to the pit of his stomach. He thought about his thousand baht note and a smiling storekeeper.

He slept on a flattened cardboard box in his cousin's room for the next two nights. The next few days on Beach Road with the watches were a disaster. Farangs ignored him or pushed him away, nobody wanted a watch.

Da smiled when she saw him. They put their belongings on the sidewalk and hugged. At least he had her and he was away from the temptation of gambling. She was excited that they were going to live together and swung a key in front of his face. She told him that she had the ideal place for starting their new life together.

She has paid the deposit of one thousand baht on a room in Pattaya Tai next to the Black Boot ago-go.
