As luck would have it, twenty minutes later they all returned, arms laden with plastic bags of food. I watched as they gathered plates, bowls, spoons and forks from my kitchen and spread out the feast over my floor. Here were five gorgeous ladies, only one of whom, being the girlfriend of my mate, was untouchable for moral reasons. Three were untouchable for personal emasculation concerns, but that didn't stop me looking. Then, one of them invited me to join them. It wouldn't have mattered if I had just pigged out at a T-bone steak all-you-can-eat buffet and the girls were serving up boiled buffalo dung sandwiches, it was an invitation I could not refuse. It was an invitation from the Gods, or more correctly, the Goddesses.

Many thoughts raced through my mind as I sat cross-legged on that floor pretending to be interested in whatever they were talking about. They must have wondered why I kept smiling as I thought back to ancient Persia and the harems kept by the kings of the time. I pictured my dinner companions all dressed like Barbara Eden in the sitcom I Dream of Jeanie, a television series which ran its course long before any of them were born. I wanted to take a group photo to record the moment forever. Most importantly, I wanted to rush out to find a hardware store and buy a welder. If I could make it back home before they finished eating, I was going to seal all the exits.
