

PUZZLING TIMES

Noi was very high maintenance and didn't think her Swedish husband was living up to his end of the bargain. She also neglected to tell him that she was seeing someone else, not one but five. Her husband worked offshore and each time he turned up she said she had to go up country for some reason or another.

Then one day the penny dropped and he realised that she had been giving him excuses so she could see someone else (each arriving in a different month). He slowly put it together and figured out what she was up to. Can you?

Find the nationality of each boyfriend, what month they arrived and what excuse she used for each of them.

After a shocking run with our crosswords - we've opted for a logical puzzle this month. Sent in by a friend living in Pattaya, you will notice that this scenario, of course, would never happen here. Good Luck - answer next month or email: info@andamanpost.com if you need a hint.

CLUES

- Noi's first excuse was she had to leave because the family buffalo was sick. Her last excuse wasn't to help a friend or ailing relative.
- In successive months (though on different visits), Noi stayed with the Australian man, used house repairs as an excuse on the fifth visit and met the American.
- Noi saw the English man on a later visit than the Australian (for which she didn't use the ailing relative excuse).
- She said her brother had a motorbike accident when one man turned up in October (but not the Frenchman). The Swiss guy arrived in August.
- She used the friend in need excuse on a later visit than the ailing relative one. Neither of these excuses was used to see the American.

A CROSSWORD A DAY..

We're made a few errors with our crosswords of late As you may have picked up, the left hand column was missing in last month's crossword. But from the clues it could be worked out what was missing. Just adding that little extra mystery!!!
