As the ride to Clarets was only about 200 metres I didn't bother to ask the fare. When we arrived I handed him 20 baht and he looked at me like I was having him on. He demanded 40 baht. By this time I was in no mood to be ripped off and I think he sensed my feeling because although he didn't beam one of those Thai smiles, he accepted that was all he was going to get.

Pickles Pub and Bistro had their opening bash on February 13th. After observing all the dramas that go into making an establishment from scratch, I was pleasantly surprised to see that everything was up and operational on the night. Well almost, the neon light sign next to the kitchen wasn't working due to the fact that when it was turned on, planes were diverting from Phuket International because it was the brightest light on the island. A dimmer switch due to be installed soon should tone it down a bit. Sunglasses are available at the door. (Picture right - Opening night at Pickles)

Anton's in Patong have started doing a cavery on Sunday and Wednesday nights. It started out at 280 baht, but it got a little confusing if you needed to go back for seconds, so it is to be changed to 350 baht for an All-You-Can-Eat style. With roast pork, beef and lamb on the menu, the most voracious appetite will be satisfied.
